ALLIES & ORGANIZATIONS

Draven Nightwarden was once a humble farmer, devoted to Selûne, the Moonmaiden, until fate made him her Avatar of Twilight. When a rift to the void unleashed horrors upon his village, he called out in desperation, and Selûne answered—granting him celestial power to banish the darkness. For years, he roamed the land as her divine champion, a beacon of silver light against the encroaching night. But as his power grew, so did his arrogance. Tempted by the idea of mastering both light and dark, he strayed from his goddess's path, believing he knew balance better than even Selûne herself.

In her sorrow, Selûne cast him down, stripping him of her divine grace. Now, a mere shadow of his former self, Draven wanders the world in penance, seeking redemption not through words but through action. Though weakened,

CHARACTER BACKSTORY

Moonlit Aura – Even in his weakened state, Draven radiates a faint silver glow in dim light, particularly under the moon. This ethereal presence hints at his former celestial powers and makes him seem almost otherworldly, especially when he is deep in prayer or focused on his divine connection.

Silver Mark of Selûne – On the back of his neck, partially hidden by his hair, is a crescent moon-shaped scar. It was once a mark of Selûne's favor, but now it serves as a constant reminder of his fall. The scar flickers faintly when he calls upon divine power, a symbol of the grace he is trying to reclaim.

Shadowed Senses – Draven's connection to the twilight allows him to see in near total darkness, his silver eyes glowing faintly to pierce even the deepest shadows.

Haunting Dreamscapes – Draven often experiences vivid, sometimes terrifying

ADDITIONAL FEATURES & TRAITS

Tear-Stained Letter – A letter from Aster Calloway, the blind seer who once guided him. It contains words of wisdom, reminding him to never stray from his true path, but the paper is stained with Draven's own tears from the day he lost everything. The letter serves as a painful reminder of his mentors' faith in him, and the promises he must fulfill.
